Patricia was born in Frankfort on January 31, 1938, to the late John Miles Woodside and Flossie Dell Hall Woodside. During the 1970s, Patricia served as the Branch Manager for the State's Division of Emergency Medical Services in the Cabinet for Human Resources. She was among those who initiated, wrote, and oversaw the Emergency Medical Technician training course for first responders. She was also instrumental in the various grant programs that enabled Kentucky's cities and counties to purchase properly-fitted ambulances that met the highest of national standards and promoted the proper training of emergency medical personnel changing the future of emergency services in Kentucky. Undeniably, her dedication to the mission of the Division of Emergency Medical Services has saved the lives of countless Kentuckians, young and old, over the decades.

In her spare time, Patricia was an avid reader and gardener. In addition, she was very involved in theater throughout her life. She appeared in school plays as a child, was active in organizing and directing plays for Frankfort's Children's Theater, and appeared in a lead role in Arsenic and Old Lace. She will be remembered for her unwavering love for her family, and for her selflessness and humanitarianism.
